Leader-led Change is The Key to Flawless Strategic Execution

As the leader of your organization's strategic initiatives you must generate significant value as a way to gain a competitive advantage. Your executives approve the business case. A Sponsor is named. The firm's best and brightest are charged with designing a solution which will then be deployed across a broader population. Your people are looking to you for direction, strength and guidance.

The initial work is exciting. Executives care about what's happening, and people pay attention. At some point, reality sets in and challenges arise. Stakeholders who initially bought in don't seem to be fully on board any longer. People don't seem to be embracing change, even though there is a clear mandate to proceed. These challenges are normal and can be overcome. After all, the initiative must work; you've made the commitment and the organization is counting on the ROI.
